WRESTLING GAINS

Game Now Seems to Be on High Plane Here in Richmond.

The wrestling game as promoted in Richmond by George Herbert has been one of the interesting sports of this summer, and increasing audiences attest to the popularity of the pastime For several weeks last fall the wrestling game was on the dead list here because of the appearance of several wrestlers who did not do clean work on the mat, each bout ending in a sort of rough house. Then it was that Promoter Herbert announced that there would be no more wrestling in Richmond under his supervision until he could guarantee the right sort of sport. Herbert formed a partnership with Frank Morano, and they sought wrestiers who would elevate the sport.

Billie Collins, of St. Louis, was one of the first to appear here under the new management. He met Joe Turner, of Richmond and Washington, holder of the middleweight championship, and Collins was bested. Then such men as 'Young Olson," Dynamite Jack Jordan and Con. Albright came and were defeated by Turner. Jordan and Olson met in a bout to decide which of the two would meet Turner in a bout for the championship, and Olson won out. In going against Turner, Olson showed that he was in as perfect condition as any man could be. He had the ability, science and strength, but he fell a victim to the "whirl-i-gig" which Turner used

The bout last Thursday night be-tween Turner and Albright for the championship was won by Turner, who, through accident, struck Albright's head with such force against the platform that Albright was knocked out for ten minutes. That Turner was on the square and did not wish to take undue advantage of Albright was shown when Turner announced that due to the accident to Albright he would split the gate re-ceipts with him and also agree to give him a return match. This act of fair-ness met with the approval of the audience, and aided materially in plac-ing the wrestling game on a high plane The return match between Tur-and Albright will probably be aged at Broad Street Park next week
